A US-Ireland partnership involving researchers at Queen's University Belfast has been awarded £2.9

The grant has been awarded under the US-Ireland Research and Development Partnership Programm

The five-year programme will focus on the development of 'nanomedicine' in the treatment of pancrea

Almost 9,000 people are diagnosed with pancreatic cancer in the UK every year. It has the lowest five

In Northern Ireland, during 2009-2013 an average of 220 cases of pancreatic cancer were diagnosed

Pancreatic cancer is often very advanced by the time it is diagnosed and only 3% of patients are still a

This partnership is a unique arrangement involving funding agencies in the USA, the Republic of Irela

Queen's University Professor Christopher Scott, Director of Research, Molecular Therapeutics Cluste

"This is another example of the commitment of researchers and staff at Queen's to advancing knowle

Dr Janice Bailie, Assistant Director of the Public Health Agency's HSC R&D Division, which is funding